The whole ball of wax

Herko...

(my initial objections was having to do any of this on an off-site location out of the sight of the board - when I signed on it was my understanding everything was going to be out in the open. Transparent)

The whole ball of wax

Check in and given our task. As far as I could see everything came down from DJ and from my standpoint of view, I was simply trying to implement his plan.

Where it failed in my opinion was teams planning independent of each other on various private forums, none having the necessary authority to bring it to the board, discuss it and then carry through.

I posted a new thread questioning the wisdom of deleting posts before an archive backup was made.

The conversation returned to Check in with the news current and past moderators would be put on inactive status. We were to complete this new forums structure in 24 hours.

In response, I posted online the new forum structure on the design thread and got into trouble with kc0maz for that move. This was suppose to be a surprise to the community. This forum structure I posted was given to kc0maz by DJ which she passed to the team. (sailjapan, myself and Northern, - JV wasn't showing up.)

I had pm'd DJ to allow us to put that forum structure along side of the existing forums, allowing the teams to have a place to work on xoops.org. He thanked me but nothing happened, so I challenged him when I saw we had the permissions but not the authority. The realization we were not making any of these decisions seperately or in unison, made me take stock of my part in this. Tom was right, we were being played against the old-timers.

Another Thread I started asking about database function and expressing desire for someone who knew about that be consulted.

I expressed my ideas about moderating in regard to changing content and over moderating.

Monthly meetings...

No need to change what worked ok.

I didn't have any familiarity with this and made no comment.
